Description

IMAGE: Cloak of the Empire

This voluminous grey cloak has bright red trim and the sigil from an unknown empire on its back. The cloak is stiff and does not fold as normal cloth might. Whenever the bearer of this cloak is struck by a ranged attack, they may reduce the damage from that attack by their Charisma modifier.

In Midgard

In Midgard, this shroud belongs to Baba Yaga. It was stolen from her by a mystic in whom she put great trust and invited into her hut for dinner. The mystic betrayed the witch's trust, making off with several of her powerful magical objects. Grandmother can see the bearer of this shroud whenever they cast it over themselves. She knows their location and learns a detail about them each time she sees them. Inevitably, the witch will come for her shroud, sending one of the vels or some less comely minion to retrieve it. Should the party return the shroud to Baba Yaga, they may gain a small boon from her, though as can be expected by the inconstant crone she may also transform them into cutlery.
